ant yields the same results [linkerthor]. In order to check the universality of the results for angular correlations, we have also calculated the ratio of the transverse to longitudinal elliptic flow  $v_2^T/v_2^L \simeq 0.22$  for Au+Au collisions at 11.5 AGeV. The universal ratio of transverse to longitudinal elliptic flow has been obtained in [may98] by solving the hydrodynamic equations for the  $\alpha$ -particle dynamics. We deduce from Eq. (ratio) a very good agreement with a (3+1)-dimensional hydrodynamic calculation in [huovinen97]. On the other hand, the ratio in [vis98] is much smaller,  $v_2^T/v_2^L \simeq 0.06$ . Conclusions ===== We have shown that the entropy density can be used to select the space-time points at which the emission is non-local (anisotropic) and as a dynamical condition for the evolution of the system. Based on the quantum statistical and the Boltzmann kinetic theory, the entropy density can be viewed as the (kinetic) degree of freedom in a many-body system. Being formally the same in both theories, it is not surprising that the pair correlation functions are roughly the same in the Boltzmann and quantum statistical theory. However, the quantum statistical theory has in general much better convergence properties. With regards to the experimental data, the small negative correlation obtained for protons and  $\overline{p}$ -pairs is the most important. The repulsive core is also the most important feature in the longitudinal momentum correlation function. The longitudinal momentum correlation function is the same as in the Boltzmann kinetic theory, which in turn follows from the quantum statistical theory. The negative core is seen in both the Boltzmann and the quantum statistical theory. The transverse momentum correlation functions are also qualitatively the same as in the Boltzmann theory. The correlation functions calculated in the quantum statistical theory are very similar to the ones obtained from transport theory. It is the in-medium interaction, or more precisely the scattering cross sections which are responsible for
